

Revised 12/18/07

Sample Works Cited and Parenthetical Documentation Entries Done in MLA Style

There are two basic elements to giving proper credit to sources used in research.

1. Anytime you use borrowed information in the body of your paper—direct quotes or paraphrased (summarized) material—you should follow it immediately with a parenthetical citation.
2. You should have a works cited entry for all cited sources at the end of your paper on a separate Works Cited page. These entries should be double spaced and listed alphabetically.

The format for these citations can vary, depending on the type of source you are citing. Below are sample parenthetical citations and works cited entries for various types of sources.
